What is Alien Worlds?

Alien Worlds (TLM) is a Layer 1 play-to-earn DeFi platform that operates with the concept of the metaverse which supports the Binance Smart Chain (BSC) and Ethereum blockchain launched on the WAX blockchain. The game features “explorers” mining Trillium on various alien planets while they lease their vehicles that aid missions which in turn rewards the players with TLM coins and in-game NFTs.

This platform was developed by Dacoco GmbH, a team of German developers that have created up to three projects in 2020. From the roadmap of this project, it can be seen that the phases involved the design of the metaverse and their planetary worlds, blueprint development for technical aspects of the platform, and the full launch of the project into the crypto market.

The platform, Alien Worlds, is predicated on the P2E model that is made popular with the introduction of blockchain games. The player can sell their NFTs or tokens for cash after participating in planet DAOs on the protocol. With the phases, which featured the native token, and the metaverse with the NFTs, came a high marketing effort that’s aimed to onboard as many users as possible. The multichain network supports many integrations and collaborations from other platforms which induce the growth of the entire gaming sector in the blockchain. This platform is a highly innovative mainnet and is already available on many major cryptocurrency exchanges like Binance, Coinbase, Huobi global, etc.

Tillium (TLM) is the native token of Alien Worlds, an ERC-20 token that has a deflationary structure. TLM is free, which attracted a lot of young users in the earlier stage and they’re allowed to partner up for rewards within the gaming world.

TLM is used in daily transactions within the chain. They can be used in upgrading gaming characters, participating in in-game events like quests and competitions, purchasing items like NFT cards, etc. The gamers are required to have a WAX wallet for their tokens.

Alien Worlds Game

The concept of the game is quite simple and user-friendly. The story behind the entire era simulation is that humans in the 2050s were trying to escape from a pandemic on Earth and stumble upon other habitable planets through exploration where they try to settle down while hustling for a scarce resource known as the Trillium (TLM). The game features most of the necessities for survival in the multi-planetary dimension like weapons, tools, etc. But most of these necessities are NFT cards, so the players are required to buy these cards with their TLM or try mining them.

Within the ecosystem, many DAOs allow the holders voting right within the network. This token (TLM) allows them to stake, vote, and also be voted for. To become a potential leader in the game, a player has to run for a councilor position on a planet or two. A planet can be managed by more than one elected Councillor, though they'll have to share multi-sig control over the DAO account.

The game is free to play which means there's no hindrance for new players to participate on the platform. Players can also stake their tokens to Planet DAOs which offers them an opportunity to form more alliances with more planets and get rewarded for it. But the amount that a player stakes over time determines the extent of his vote in the protocol.
