What is Aptos?

Launched by ex-Meta employees, Aptos is a brand-new Layer 1 blockchain with market-leading performance, scalability, and security.

Aptos achieves high throughput and low latency through its parallel and modular transaction processing pipeline. With a TPS of 160,000, the usability of Aptos is not limited by low throughput.

Aptos attempts to deliver additional features and performance compared to existing blockchains.

One of the significant advantages of Aptos is its support for atomicity, allowing for complex transactions and instant upgrades through its on-chain change management protocols. Based on the Move coding language, the Aptos network offers fast and secure transaction execution.

Additionally, Aptos supports tokenized securities, including shares, bonds, and real estate, which increases the accessibility and liquidity of these assets. Aptos also allows for the efficient management of tokenized assets, such as the administration of voting rights, dividends, and other corporate actions.

Current Aptos Price

At the time of writing, Aptos is trading at $7.43 with a market capitalization of $1,552,541,211, ranking #33 amongst all cryptocurrencies by that metric. In the past 24 hours, the APT coin price has decreased by 3.15% with a trading volume of $92,717,589.

Can Aptos Beat Solana?

Solana is a high-performance blockchain platform designed for building decentralized applications (dApps) and is known for its fast transaction processing times, low fees, and high scalability.

Aptos, on the other hand, is a decentralized P2P lending and borrowing platform that allows users to access liquidity and earn interest on their assets. It has its own unique features and use cases that set it apart from other cryptocurrencies.

Note that Aptos (APT) and Solana (SOL) are different cryptocurrencies with distinct features and use cases. Here are some of the main differences between the two:

1. Use Case: Aptos is a decentralized P2P lending and borrowing platform that enables users to access liquidity and earn interest on their assets. In contrast, Solana is a high-performance blockchain platform designed for building decentralized applications (dApps).

2. Technology: Solana uses a unique consensus mechanism called Proof of History (PoH). While Aptos uses the Ethereum blockchain as its underlying technology and leverages smart contracts for executing lending and borrowing transactions.

3. Market Capitalization: Solana has a significantly higher market capitalization than Aptos, making it one of the most valuable cryptocurrencies in the market.

The following mentioned are some potential advantages of Aptos over Solana:

- Aptos is specifically designed for P2P lending and borrowing, which is a significant use case in the decentralized finance (DeFi) space.
- Aptos is built on the Ethereum blockchain, which is the most widely used blockchain platform for DeFi applications. This means that Aptos can benefit from the existing Ethereum developer community, tools, and infrastructure.
- While Solana is known for its low transaction fees, Aptos has the potential to offer even lower fees for P2P lending and borrowing transactions due to its use of the Ethereum network.

However, it's challenging to say with certainty whether Aptos can beat Solana or not. Still, both have their own unique features and use cases, and it's possible for both to coexist and succeed in their respective niches.

Final Thoughts

Aptos is a promising blockchain network with advanced capabilities, making it an excellent choice for developers and users alike. Aptos's Facebook lineage makes it strong in Marketing but the blockchain is far more centralized than many other blockchains.

Considering these factors, Aptos does seem like a potentially great investment, especially in the short run, due to its unique architecture and its proven success on its testnet. Furthermore, the solid reputation of the Aptos development team certainly does lend credibility to the project. Ultimately, it appears to be a solid investment to consider adding to your crypto portfolio. Get started trading APT by signing up for a BTCC account today.
