What is Arweave (AR)?

According to their website, Arweave Network is a protocol that provides long-term, sustainable data storage for a one-time cost. It's a lot like how Uber works, except it uses a decentralized network to match drivers with riders. The Arweave protocol connects those in need of long-term data storage with others who have surplus capacity on their hard drives.

Arweave's protocol generates a permaweb architecture, which can be thought of as an everlasting worldwide web of pages and programs. Members of the permaweb community either volunteer for or are compensated for keeping the network running smoothly. There is no distinction between the regular web and the permaweb.

Anything posted to the permaweb, from photos to articles, will remain accessible and decentralized indefinitely. The entire network is run on AR tokens and is owned by its users. It's also a freely available network design. The community has developed a full suite of tools and services for deploying distributed applications on the permaweb.
