What is Cronos?

Cronos (CRO), an Ethereum Virtual Machine (EVM)-compatible Layer-1 (L1) blockchain network powered by Ethemint and built on the Cosmos SDK, runs parallel to the Crypto.org Chain.

Supporting the Inter-Blockchain Communication (IBC) protocol, Cronos is the first blockchain to interoperate with both Ethereum and Cosmos ecosystems. Its Proof-of-Authority (POA) consensus mechanism integrates decentralization with streamlined, scalable, and eco-friendly transaction processing.

The Cronos ecosystem aims to empower and scale decentralized applications (dApps) for the multichain world of the future, with a focus on use cases of non-fungible tokens (NFTs), decentralized finance (DeFi), and payments. Users get to import cryptocurrencies from Ethereum, Cosmos, and other chains into Cronos. They can also port apps and smart contracts from Ethereum and EVM-compatible chains.

Crypto.com Coin (CRO) is the native utility token of the Crypto.org Chain and Cronos Chain, which are designed by CRO Protocol Labs, also known as Crypto.com. Some of its use cases include:

- Payments
- Trading
- Financial services
- NFTs
- DeFi
- Gaming Finance (GameFi)
- Web3
- Metaverse

The Rebranding of Crypto.com Coin (CRO) to Cronos

Formerly known as Monaco, Crypto.com was founded in 2016 in Hong Kong by Bobby Bao, Gary Or, Kris Marszalek, and Rafael Melo. It is currently operated by Foris DAX Asia, a Singapore-based company, which is a subsidiary of Foris DAX MT (Malta) Limited.

Crypto.com ran a successful ICO in 2017 and launched its now-discontinued token, MCO. On August 2, 2020, Crypto.com discontinued the MCO token in favor of CRO. MCO holders were able to exchange their tokens for CRO tokens at a rate of 1:33. Even though the exchange caused some outrage amongst the Crypto.com user base, many believed that this was the right business move.

Here's a look at how CRO started:

- With a fixed supply of 100 billion, CRO was officially launched in December 2018 with an airdrop via the mobile application. Unlike most cryptocurrencies, there was no ICO, pre-sale, or public sale.
- The airdrop lasted six months before being locked for another year.
- Due to the emergence of Crypto.com, CRO became more accessible to the public.
- Token holders were directly eligible to stake their coins at a 20% annual percentage yield on the platform.
- In February 2021, a major update to the distribution was announced by Crypto.com that 70 billion CRO would be burned. This later had a massive impact on the relationship between the circulating supply of CRO to the maximum supply.
- In February 2022, Crypto.org decided to rebrand the Crypto.com Coin (CRO) as 'Cronos.' However, the CRO ticker remained the same.
- In January 2023, Cronos mainnet network was upgraded to v1.0 'Galileo'.
