What is JOE?

According to Trader Joe's website, the project claims to be a "one-stop decentralised trading platform on the Avalanche network".

Unlike other cryptocurrency exchanges, Trader Joe's platform is decentralised, which means it operates without a central authority. Users of the exchange do not have to deposit their cryptocurrencies with Trader Joe to conduct peer-to-peer or wallet-to-wallet transactions. The exchange offers decentralised financial services such as swapping, staking and yield farming.

Avalanche, the blockchain network upon which Trader Joe is built, is an alternative to other networks such as Bitcoin, Ethereum and Polkadot. Avalanche claims the speed of transactions on its network is faster than its competitors and the costs are far lower than Ethereum's gas fees. The utility token of the Avalanche network is AVAX.

JOE coin is used for the governance of the exchange. The project developers "envision Trader Joe to be a community governed protocol, such as a DAO (decentralised autonomous organisation)." In addition, holders of JOE coins are also rewarded with a share of the exchange revenues.

Trader Joe has several features on its exchange: trading, liquidity pools, staking, lending and launchpad.

The exchange charges 0.3% trading fees for every token swap; 0.25% of the fees are paid to liquidity pools (LP), while 0.05% is sent to the JOE token farm.

The JOE token farm is part of the ecosystem that rewards users for staking their JOE holdings in the exchange. When users stake their JOE tokens, they are exchanged for xJOE, which is periodically bought back by the exchange. The buyback is funded by 0.05% of every trading fee. According to Trader Joe, the buybacks currently happen every two days.

The platform has also launched Banker Joe, a lending protocol that allows users to borrow against collateral assets. According to the exchange, "the protocol has safety measures to restrict users from taking actions (such as borrowing more tokens or withdrawing collateral) that would cause them to exceed their borrowing limit".

However, Trader Joe warned that this lending service is not risk-free, as borrowers “risk liquidation if they are unable to keep a leveraged trade open, which in turn places lenders at risk of being unable to withdraw their deposit”.

Current JOE Price
