What is Loopring?

Loopring is a decentralized exchange (DEX) that uses a zkRollup layer-2 scaling solution to provide fast and cheap trading. The protocol in a liquidity pool ensures that trades are executed at fair prices based on the ratio of the assets in the pool.

The zero-knowledge rollups enable Loopring exchanges to execute crucial computations elsewhere instead of directly completing them on the Ethereum blockchain. The idea is that by lowering the number of transactions that a Loopring exchange must submit to the Ethereum network, traders will benefit from increased speed and lower costs. This will help traders to compare prices for their digital assets.

Overall, Loopring is a unique protocol that tends to keep the pros of DEXs and CEXs and increase efficiency while eliminating custodial risks. Loopring aims to integrate the centralized order matching to the decentralized on-blockchain order settlement. In this way, it can bring the best aspects of both the exchanges (centralized and decentralized).

Loopring is best suited for users who prioritize fast and cheap trading, while SushiSwap may be a better option for users who value higher liquidity and trading volume.
