Recent events in the cryptocurrency industry have been dominated by the mainnet deployment of the Aptos blockchain and the associated airdrop. The airdrop recipients have been able to get free cryptocurrency despite the widespread debate surrounding the tokenomics and token distribution.

You're disappointed that you missed the APT airdrop from Aptos, right? Never fear. At least five very promising projects are considering doing airdrops in the near future. We'll fill you in on which projects are qualified and what you need to do to maximize your chances of being selected for the airdrop.

1. ZetaChain

The ZetaChain project is the first one that may hold an airdrop. On August 10, a layer-1 blockchain built with the Cosmos SDK was live for testing.

ZetaChain intends to be an omnichain decentralized application (dApp) that interacts with a wide variety of blockchains. These networks range from Layer-1 blockchains like Ethereum and Binance Smart Chain (BSC) to Layer-2 solutions like Polygon and Optimism.

ZetaLabs' first production dApp was an omnichain swap that allowed users to transfer value between different blockchain networks. ZETA points can be earned by participating in asset swaps, recruiting new members, and reporting bugs on the testnet. The points available for various activities are listed below. These are the steps you need to take to gain ZETA points:

5,000 Points	Invite a new member with your unique invite code
1,000 Points	For each daily transaction you do (max 1 per day)
250 Points	For each daily transaction per person you invite
10k+ Points	For discovering issues and reporting them in our Discord you'll get points depending on the issue's severity!

Creating a testnet wallet and requesting tokens from a faucet are the initial steps in participating in the testnet. It is possible to begin exchanging assets after the wallet has been verified. Currently, we are using the ETH Goerli testnet, the Polygon Mumbai testnet, and the BSC testnet for our beta testing.

2.SUI

The SUI blockchain, along with Aptos, is one of the most talked-about cryptocurrencies right now. Former Meta staffers established SUI, and like Aptos, they are working on a proof-of-stake layer 1 blockchain using Diem's MOVE programming language.

Despite the fact that SUI stopped accepting new validators at the end of August for the incentivized testnet, there is still a chance of an airdrop because SUI should be interested in increasing the network's liquidity.

Due to the lack of current information, it is suggested that interested parties keep an eye out for similar projects, such as DEXs on SUI, and follow the project on Medium, Twitter, and Discord. The SUI wallet is already available as a Chrome extension.

The SUI token on the testnet is another viable option. You may get it very easily from any platform that has a built-in sink. The BlueMoveNFT option is a good one. In terms of Aptos and SUI's multi-chain NFT marketplaces, this project is already at the forefront.

How to get #Sui (by @Mysten_Labs) testnet token?

If you want to experience projects on Sui Ecosystem (for future #Airdrops maybe), then having SUI testnet token is essential

This topic will cover ways to get it. Let's go.

3.zkSync

zkSync is a potential third choice. Using zkSync testnet dapps could be your best hope for receiving airdrop tokens. Users will first need to set up an RPC setup before they can proceed. One simple method is to connect your wallet to the testnet at <https://chainlist.org>.

In the following thread, an anonymous Twitter user has provided numerous examples of how to use the zkSync testnet and associated dApps.

4.Layer Zero

Layer Zero is the fourth possible selection. This work constitutes an omnichain interoperability protocol, a mechanism for achieving interoperability between blockchains for the purpose of developing cross-chain applications through the use of a simple messaging system.

For one thing, participating in the free testnet may make you eligible for an upcoming airdrop. Some of the bridges that can be tried out are the USDC Layer Zero Bridge and the Liquid Swap Bridge.

Stargate Finance, on the other hand, provides a fascinating prospect. Sequoia Capital, PayPal Ventures, FTX Ventures, Andreessen Horowitz, Coinbase Ventures, Tiger Global, Uniswap Labs, and other investors have led the charge in raising $135 million for the liquidity transmission protocol.

The goal is to join the Stargate Finance DAO as a voter. To do so, they must first acquire some Stargate Finance Token (STG) on Uniswap or another mainnet exchange and stake it.

This entitles them to a say in any future governance suggestions made by Stargate Finance. You have a good probability of receiving an airdrop if you are a Stargate Finance DAO voter. Here you'll find extensive guidance on how to do something.

5.Quai Network

One final option is Quai Network. By combining multiple blockchains into one, the Quai Network is able to achieve very high throughputs at the layer 1 level.

The project keeps a social media rewards program on several social sites like Twitter, YouTube, and Reddit to encourage early community interaction. Airdrops are most likely to be distributed to engaged community members.
