Are you still struggling to understand Notcoin's complexities? Here's a peek at the clicker game that runs on Telegram as the NOT token airdrop draws closer.

Millions of players have been captivated by the Telegram-based game Notcoin in recent months. The game has amassed 30 million total players, with five million daily active users at its highest point recently. That is far more than other cryptocurrency games.

The game, developed by Open Builders, will launch a token on The Open Network (TON) in the upcoming weeks. It is based on the Telegram messaging software. The company views it as a novel approach to fairly distribute tokens to community members, as its founder previously stated to Decrypt.

Why would thirty million players in a chat app tap a golden coin? rewards for cryptocurrencies, of course! What you should know about Notcoin, the forthcoming token, is provided here.

What is Notcoin?

Put plainly, Notcoin is a social clicker game. Open the Telegram app, tap the Notcoin bot, invite others to join, and start playing if you want to earn in-game currency.

When you first launch the game, a gold coin appears on your screen. By tapping the coin, you can acquire Notcoin, an in-game currency. You can't click indefinitely in the absence of obstacles since you have a certain amount of energy that gradually runs out and then refills.

You go up a global leaderboard with several tiers as you accumulate more and more Notcoin, going from Silver league to Diamond league. By completing missions that typically include actions like following a Twitter account or joining a Telegram community, players can earn additional tokens.

In the game, players can also employ "boosts" or power-ups to enhance their earning potential. Along with extra permanent enhancements that players may purchase with their Notcoin, there are two types of complimentary boosts that are refreshed every day: "Full Energy" and "Turbo" boosts. These benefits allow users to spend more energy at once and earn more coins per tap. Additionally, an Auto-Tap bot continues to gather money while you're away.

Gamers can buy aesthetic improvements to alter the game's background or the appearance of the coin they're tapping using the Notcoin they've earned.

What is the NOT token?

Even after reading that, you may be asking: What gives 30 million people the want to tap a coin in order to gain in-game cash? Following initial reticence, the Notcoin team has revealed an airdrop where players would be given actual tokens. Notcoin, the in-game currency that players have been earning, will be exchangeable for the NOT token when it becomes live on The Open Network (TON), the network that Telegram was initially created on.

When is the launch of the NOT token?

Regarding the launch date of the token, the Notcoin team has been exceedingly evasive. Not long ago, they included a glitchy visual that flashed across gamers' screens, reading "7 Days." In the aftermath of the issue, they informed players through the community channel that the "mining phase" will conclude on April 1st, after which a new gaming phase would commence.

Although they were unable to provide a specific date, a Notcoin spokesperson assured Decrypt's GG that the airdrop will take place within two weeks following the announcement on March 25.

Pre-market discounts

The Notcoin team has just released an NFT voucher program in preparation for the airdrop. You can turn your Notcoin into NFT coupons in increments of 10 million if you've earned more than 10 million.

Prior to NOT's official launch, users can buy, sell, or exchange vouchers to speculate on the token's value. Currently, one Notcoin voucher is being sold for around $10 (or $50).

No need for players without 10 million Notcoin—their Notcoin will be directly exchangeable for NOT when the token becomes live, so they won't actually be missing out on anything if they don't participate in the voucher system. Well, except from some conjecture.
