What is Moonbeam?

Moonbeam is a developer oriented blockchain dedicated to providing compatibility with existing Ethereum developer tool chains and networks. It is implemented by providing a complete EVM implementation, a Web3 compliant API, and a bridge between Moonbeam and the existing Ethereum network. This allows developers to deploy existing solidity smart contracts and DAPP front ends to Moonbeam with minimal changes.

Moonbeam will also be a parachain on the Polkadot network. This means that it will gain shared security from the Polkadot trunk chain and be able to integrate with other chains connected to Polkadot (once this feature is available at Polkadot). At present, the circulation supply of this token is 227380902 coins, and the maximum supply is 1000000000 coins. Its annual inflation rate is 5%, and there is no unlimited supply at present.

One use case of this token involves promoting the chain governance mechanism of Moonbeam. An example of the governance mechanisms it promotes includes making recommendations, electing Council members, and voting. Users can also use GLMR to pay for transactions on the network. Another use case for this token is to motivate the collation. The token can be purchased and traded on many exchanges, including binance, Kraken and kucoin.

What is GLMR Crypto?

GLMR cryptocurrency is the local and governance token of Moonbeam network. The token is mainly the brain of the network, enabling it to function normally as a decentralized smart contract platform. Its function in the whole network is the best, because it is the core of network activities. It is the gateway of important functions for network participants to enter the network. The token was first issued through a private community event called take flight. The event issued 100million tokens to the public.
